Editing Digital Photos Photoshop is definitely the industry standard for fine digital photo editing, but Photoshop isn't the only software that's designed to edit digital photos. In fact, it's common to create editable versions of raw or unprocessed photos on a computer. Your camera takes pictures that have settings for brightness, contrast, white balance, and other settings in addition to specific photo information. When you press the button for taking a photo, these settings are rendered or compressed for speed. Your camera saves the file as an image file in a format, which can be edited or adjusted later to give the photo its final look and feel. If you're taking a photo, you need to change some of the settings. If you're viewing a photo file on your computer, you can adjust those settings to make the photo look better. And if you're printing a photo, you need to do the same thing to the file before you send it to the photo lab to be printed. Figure 8-4 shows an example of a high-quality digital photo that was taken with a standard digital camera. When you open the image on your computer, you can manipulate it to make it brighter or duller, brighter or darker, lighter or darker, contrasty, or color balanced.

camera you use, the type of lens you use, the lighting you use, the exposure setting, and other factors. But you can apply corrective measures to make a photo look better (or just improve the way it's displayed on your monitor). Raw photos have no settings for white balance, brightness, contrast, or color balance. These settings are recorded in a file but not rendered on your photo. Instead, you can adjust these

Adobe Photoshop Elements gives you a complete set of tools for fine-tuning your photos. You can convert, delete, add, and modify colors, levels, saturation, and exposure, sharpness, and the color balance. You can also perform various editing operations, like merge, exposure, and color adjustments, adjustment layers, layer masks, and selections. These elements help you to create new images or to improve the ones you've already created. In this article, we are going to look at how to perform the different steps in Adobe Photoshop Elements, starting with the Import function and ending with the Export function.

Import Function

The Import function gives you the opportunity to import images from the camera or from memory card. You can import a single file, or you can import several files in different formats. For each photo that you import, you have the possibility of analyzing it with several different functions, which are often given a different name depending on the format. For example, if you import a photo in JPEG format, you will have the following functions:

- Capture -- for JPEG and TIFF photos;
- Adjust -- for TIFF photos;
- Color and Adjust -- for images with an image resolution of 72 dpi;
- Image Alignment -- for color images;
- Layers -- for images with layers.

You can copy a single image, multiple images, or all the images from your memory card. The Import function does not work with RAW files, so, if you work with RAW images, you'll have to use another approach. You can import RAW files via the Capture panel or the Graphics panel. Most of the functions are given a specific name, depending on the format of the image you are working with. Capture

The Capture tool is the first and the most common tool in the Import function. It has been available in Elements since version 8.0. The Capture tool lets you choose the size of the photo, its orientation, whether or not it will have a border, its compression settings, the quality of the photo, and the image resolution. For example, after selecting the size, you can choose 12 or 3 inches, 3 inches, 18 inches, or 96 inches. You can create images with or without a border, and you can reduce the size of your images by up to a factor of 10. As

Q: Django: Adding a forward slash to an url
I have a model which uses slugify so that only one field is edited. My problem is that this form is a drop down list. So if i have example.com/example/example.com/example/key/ How can i get them to be example.com/example/example.com/example/key/ This is the model used class Key(models.Model): key = models.CharField(max_length=25) slug = models.CharField(max_length=255, unique=True, blank=True) district = models.CharField(max_length=80, default='Farmingdale') And this is my form class KeyForm(forms.Form): district = forms.CharField(max_length=80, required=False, widget=forms.Select(choices=get_district_list, initial=k_district)) class Meta: model = Key fields = "__all__" def save(self, *args, kwargs): self.district = kwargs['instance'].district

`super().save(args, kwargs) key = KeyForm()` A: Django's URL name resolving is not intended for paths that contain slashes. The Django documentation covers this as well, so for your example you can implement custom name resolving using `RegExp`. First, create a `RegExp` that matches all the slashes that are needed. This will be the reverse of the previous regex, so if you have `/example/ => example.com /example/key/ => example.com/example/key/ /example/key/ => example.com/example/key/` you will use this regex: `/example\([^\/]\)\/?/` To get all the slashes that are needed you can use the regex `/(\/)(?!(?`
